[OCTOBER, MDCCLXVII.] [NUMB. 97.]

THE SOUTH-CAROLINA AND COUNTRY GAZETTE; JOURNAL.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, both Foreign and Domeſtic.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1767.

FROM A LATE LONDON PAPER.

EVERY impartial READER will readily aſſign the cauſe of the publication of Mr. Wilkes's letter to his Grace the Duke of Grafton at this juncture, [See the South-Carolina Gazette, and Country Journal, No. 91] for it can be no other than for ſerving the purpoſes of a party that is become not a little deſperate as has appeared by ſome late operations, which the public, in general, may have long occaſion to rue; and ſorry I am that an unhappy gentleman is ſo circumſtanced as to appear, what he plainly now does appear to be, the inſtrument of a party.

It cannot be thought doubtful, from his own narrative, that he might have obtained his pardon, if he had followed his Grace's repeated directions, in applying to Lord Chatham; nor indeed can it be ſuppoſed that ſuch an application would have been recommended to him, had there been the leaſt reaſon to ſuppoſe it would prove fruitleſs. But Mr. Wilkes ſays he could not poſſibly make it, from every principle of honour both public and private, and therefore rather than ſolicit the intereſt of Lord Chatham, he choſe to go without it. Such is the plain concluſion to be drawn from his inference, and the public therefrom will of courſe frame its judgment on this matter.

I will not allow myſelf to decide on the cauſes or merits of Mr. Wilkes's reſentments towards that Nobleman, but reaſon muſt determine, if Lord Chatham's favour and intereſt were neceſſary for that purpoſe, that he at leaſt acted prudently as a miniſter, not to beſtow them on one of Mr. Wilkes's turn and talents, who did not think them worth aſking for, becauſe a man, who refuſed to be obliged to him, he muſt conſider as his bitter and inveterate enemy, and who poſſibly might have private ties of honour even to act hereafterwards as ſuch to the utmoſt degree of his power.

The making of that particular application neceſſary, we muſt ſuppoſe was done for good reaſons, at which we, who are out of the ſecret, can do no more than gueſs; and poſſibly they were founded in a knowledge which the noble Lord had of that gentleman's private ties and engagements, the latter of which might perhaps be to his Lordſhip's own prejudice and annoyance, in the very utmoſt degree; and Mr. Wilkes might not have it in his power to accept of any favours from his Lordſhip, who poſſibly inclined to do him more than one, if he could but have been certain they would not have been done to his own injury, and that perhaps of his country. And it may be worthy of inquiry, why his enmity to Lord Chatham ſhould have been ſo inſuperably great, ſince he had no hand in either of his proſecutions, and all that he is accuſed of by Mr. Wilkes, in regard to himſelf, was an acrimonious expreſſion, which probably did not influence a ſingle voice to his prejudice. But let candor decide, if ſuch an offence, however highly conceived, in its nature ſo inſurmountable, as to make a man, under judicial deciſions againſt him, and in an actual ſtate of outlawry, decline the mercy of his ſovereign, and continue the outcaſt of his country, rather than obtain pardon, and reſtoration through the intereſt of one who by ſuch kindneſs might have been willing to atone for the offence that had been ſo conceived againſt him: Surely, againſt ſuch rules of judging, all principles are to be oppoſed, whether religious, moral, political, or prudential; and for framing his judgment thereon, let every man appeal to his own heart, practice and obſervation, on ſuch kinds of matters.

Whether Lord Chatham has ſhewn gratitude to his friends and well-wiſhers, I pretend not to ſay; but I acknowledge any notorious deficiency therein would warrant ſuſpicion of every virtue to which he at any time has pretended. Had Mr. Wilkes, with regard to himſelf, put that virtue in him to the teſt by the adviſed application, he would have enabled us to judge of it; but as he did not, he condemns without trial, in which we are not bound to agree with him. And with regard to the other inſtance which he affects to produce towards a noble relation, there the world has been made to think, and does actually believe, that he was the party unhappily deſerted in the very cauſe of his country, and conſequently thereon can be no object of reproach.

May, 1767. A CANDID READER.

From the London Chronicles of May 23 and 26, 1767.

Some OBSERVATIONS on Mr. WILKES's LETTER to his Grace the DUKE of G****.

Cliſton, May 5, 1767.

"Every mean art hath been employed, and every diſhonourable and reproachful method made uſe of, to prevent poſterity from bleſſing the memory of a Great Patriot, who wiſhed to have entailed upon his country dignity, wealth and empire."

Mr. WILKES's Defence of Mr. PITT, November 20, 1762.

AS a celebrated Exile has been pleaſed to exhibit a moſt hideous caricatura of a Great Man, in a letter addreſſed to the Duke of G———, it may not, perhaps, at this juncture, be unpleaſant or improper, to ſee how that illuſtrious perſon has been repreſented, at different periods of time, by the ſame hand, before diſappointment, pride, rage and diſpair, gave birth to the late acrimonious letter, and produced an almoſt total recantation of the character that Mr. Wilkes had before given us of Mr. Pitt.

Hence the public will eaſily form a judgment of the degree of credit and attention that ought to be paid to the duplicity of ſuch a writer, who is now endeavouring to pull down the image that he had ſet up for worſhip. His preſent vain hope is to deſtroy his deſerved popularity, and to ruin him in the opinion of mankind. The letter is certainly wrote with much ſpirit; but, I believe, it will be proved to be no more the ſpirit of truth, than it is the ſpirit of union and concord.

Mr. Wilkes is undoubtedly in the right when he tells us, that he never pretended to any infallible ſecret to cure; he certainly has no panacea, no healing arts about him. He loves to tear open wounds, not cloſe them, and ſeems to be inſtigated, like the perſon employed by Diſcord in Virgil, to prevent matters from coming to an amicable concluſion, by endeavouring to murder the principal hero. The Temple from which he was ſent forth, is ſurely not the beloved Temple of Peace.

The deſign of this paper is to undeceive the public, to ſtate ſome facts as they really happened, and adminiſter a proper antidote to ſo ſubtle and ſtrong a poiſon.

But I ſhall firſt preſent the public with Mr. Pitt's picture, as drawn by Mr. Wilkes in the years 1762 and 1763; after viewing of which, people may poſſibly be of Opinion, that Mr. Wilkes has turned the edge of his own weapons againſt himſelf, and, like Cæſar's aſſaſſins, has wounded himſelf through his blind, miſguided rage, and over eagerneſs to ſtab the object of his hate.

Out of his own mouth let us judge him. Hear, my countrymen, hear Wilkes's own words, July 24, 1762.

"Merit alone brought Mr. Pitt into the Miniſtry; merit alone kept him there. He was determined to come into no miniſterial jobs: He ſpoke his mind freely on every occaſion; when convinced, he was always ready to change his opinion, and alter his meaſures; but had the impudence to expect conviction, before he did it. He never was afraid to bring the voice of the people to the ear of the Sovereign. He was always ready and forward to lay his own meaſures before the public. He was of ſuch unſhaken ſecrecy, that, during the whole courſe of his Miniſtry, he gave no opportunity to the moſt willing, of diſcovering our deſigns to the enemy. He was of ſuch unpardonable attention to buſineſs, that the moſt minute occurrences of his department paſſed not without examination. He was ſuch a bigot to the intereſts of the public, that no private connections whatever could induce him to prefer an undeſerving perſon. He was of ſuch unbounded ambition, that he raiſed the honour of the Engliſh name to a much greater heighth than any of his predeceſſors. He was ſo extravagantly oppoſite to the meaſures uſually adopted on ſuch occaſions, that he was fooliſhly reſolved not to give up in treaty what we had gained in war. He was ſo immoderate in his demands, that our enemies ſaw through them with a juſt indignation, and were convinced he would make a good peace, or none at all. He was ſo jealous of his miniſterial reputation, and ſo envious of thoſe who ſhould ſucceed him, that, in order to prevent their doing of any thing, he left little or nothing for them to do."

Again, November 20, 1762.

"Another copious ſource of calumny on Mr. Pitt, has been the pretended deſertion of the public, at the moſt critical period. I did not expect to have ſeen this urged, after the great part Mr. Pitt acted through the laſt ſeſſion of parliament. How nobly did he ſupport the cauſe of his country? Did he at any one moment endeavour to ſow the ſeeds of diſcord, or to kindle the leaſt ſpark of faction? His zeal for the public, his firmneſs, ſpirit and moderation, were no leſs admired than the ſolid wiſdom, deep policy, and heroic magnanimity of his councils. His very enemies bear teſtimony to his patriotiſm and greatneſs of ſoul, under all the provocations of petulant, illiberal abuſe, and on the moſt trying occaſions. I have the ſatisfaction of hoping, that through the next moſt important ſeſſion, the public will reap the benefit of the cleareſt head, and the moſt upright heart.

"The laſt topic of abuſe I ſhall now mention is, the late Miniſter's dictating to, and magiſterially controuling, all the other ſervants of the crown, and all public offices. I never heard any proof offered of this, but the ſingle word Guide, in a letter to a friend. It is not even pretended that he ever impoſed any one creature or dependant on the Board of Treaſury, Admiralty, &c. or paid any low ſycophant by places in the Exciſe or Cuſtoms."

Jan. 1, 1763. "Mr. Pitt alone ſeems to poſſeſs that great political virtue of governing kingdoms to their own ſatisfaction. This is peculiar to Mr. Pitt, that the palm of virtue and ability was readily yeilded to him by every man of every party. Mr. Pitt never fails to perſuade, to awaken, to rouze the paſſions, and to gain them over to the ſide of truth and virtue. Mr. Pitt ſeems to feel the moſt ſincere benevolence and diſpoſition to do good. As that is the moſt firm and vigorous mind, which is not elated with proſperity, nor dejected in adverſity, in this reſpect the virtue of Mr. Pitt appears compleat.

"Mr. Pitt was for many years the admiration of all his fellow-citizens; on a ſudden the wicked arts, and falſe ſuggeſtions of a few malevolent and envious men, for a ſhort time obſcured his fame, and eclipſed his glory; but his conduct was the ſame; modeſty, calm ſenſe and dignity attended him. Mr. Pitt has generoſity and ſpirit, is abſtemious, temperate and regular; and by the moſt manly ſenſe, and fine ſallies of a ſportive imagination, can charm the whole day; and, as the Greek ſaid, his entertainments pleaſe the day after they are given.

"Hogarth has put Mr. Pitt upon ſtilts, and made the people look up to him; which, after all this inſipid ridicule, they will continue to do, as a kind of tutelar deity, from whom they expect that ſecurity, and thoſe bleſſings, they deſpair of from others."

This is the fair ſide of the medal; let us now examine the reverſe, as given by Mr. Wilkes in his letter lately publiſhed; parts of which, as they relate to lord C——, I ſhall beg leave to conſider, and reply to.

I ſhall begin with the moſt henious charge; the dreadful crime that has converted the modeſt, benevolent, virtuous, firm, generous, public-ſpirited, diſintereſted Mr. Pitt, into the ſelfiſh, abject, flinty, marble hearted, proud, arrogant and ambitious Lord C——m.

Mr. Pitt did moſt undoubtedly refuſe to ſupport Mr. Wilkes's cauſe in the Houſe of Commons, deſerted and reviled him as a blaſphemer of his God, and reviler of his King; but there was no ſort of inconſiſtency in his behaviour. Mr. Pitt, as a friend to the liberty of the ſubject, ſupported Mr. Wilkes in the affair of the general warrants, &c. &c. and as long as his cauſe was good, gave him his countenance and protection with the trueſt ſincerity But when that unfortunate man had been convicted of a very indecent publication, which made ſport of all religion as well as modeſty, it became impoſſible for a perſon of Mr. Pitt's character, virtue, dignity and bluſhing honour, to undertake his defence: He was obliged to leave him to the laws of his country, and to expreſs a very proper indignation at thoſe parts of Mr. Wilkes's conduct that were ſo univerſally condemned. The work itſelf but too clearly proved the blaſphemy. The other charge I paſs over in ſilence; I deſire not to prove any thing that might make his return more difficult, though his Majeſty's goodneſs is as great as his power: Like Auguſtus he can forgive injuries committed againſt his own perſon: May his pity and mercy too, find, weep over, and ſtretch out their hands to Mr. Wilkes.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

But to return to Mr. Wilkes's next charge againſt Mr. Pitt, where he calls him the mad ſeditious tribune of the people, inſulting his Sovereign even in his capital city.

The fact here alluded to, was the very kind reception Mr. Pitt met with from the Citizens of London when he was invited to dine with the Lord Mayor, after his reſignation in 1761, (about the meaſures to be taken againſt Spain) but by what forced conſtruction or interpretation can the applauſes Mr. Pitt was there honoured with, be called an inſult upon his Sovereign? This gentleman is now traducing the whole city. The loud acclamations in favour of a perſon whoſe miniſtry his Majeſty himſelf had ſo much approved, and whom he had diſmiſſed with ſuch an affectionate regard, ought to bear a very different meaning. This charge is very diſingenuous. But if it were an inſult, which was by no means the caſe, Mr. Wilkes ſeems to have forgot that his own boſom friend, the partner of his thoughts, Mr. Pitt's noble brother, was equally concerned in it, for he likewiſe had no ſmall ſhare of the applauſe of that memorable day. The reader will alſo be pleaſed to obſerve, that this circumſtance was previous to Mr. Wilkes's writing in defence of Mr. Pitt, ſo that if he knew him to be really that mad ſeditious tribune, who had inſulted his Sovereign, it ſhould ſeem as if this inſult was not diſpleaſing even to Mr. Wilkes, ſince he choſe afterwards to make the offender his tutelar deity, and the object of all praiſe and adorations.

Mr. Wilkes's next charge is ſomething more ſerious; he aſſerts that Mr. Pitt never appeared in earneſt about any queſtion of liberty; that it was owing to him that nothing was done with regard to general warrants, and the ſeizure of papers.

Mr. Pitt's whole life gives the ſtrongeſt and cleareſt contradiction to the firſt part of the charge; the ſecond is as eaſily refuted.

Mr. Pitt was carried down to the Houſe of Commons upon that great and important debate, with the manifeſt danger of his life, being then extremely ill. He ſpoke againſt thoſe warrants with great zeal and earneſtneſs, as well as ability; but there are aſſemblies where the ſtrongeſt arguments will not always prevail. How then can it be affirmed, that it was owing to Mr. Pitt that nothing was done in that affair? Could he turn a minority into a majority? No one but a miniſter can work ſuch miracles.

Will any perſon who is not in earneſt, venture his life in a cauſe to which he is indifferent?

The letter aſſerts alſo, that L—— C—— is now the abject, crouching deputy of L—— B——, who he declared in parliament wanted wiſdom, and held principles incompatible with freedom. The world knows nothing of this abject, crouching deputed miniſter, but from Mr. Wilkes's ſingle affirmation; but we all know that his Majeſty has been pleaſed to call L—— C—— again to the miniſtry; If L—— B—— ſupports him in it, he gives the nobleſt proof of generoſity and greatneſs of ſoul, and has revenged himſelf in the fineſt manner upon L—— C—— for thoſe expreſſions, and affords the ſtrongeſt proof that he does not want wiſdom, or hold principles incompatible with freedom. What greater proof of wiſdom can he give, than in ſupporting that perſon who is the moſt capable of doing good to his country, and has upon all occaſions approved himſelf the moſt zealous protector of its liberties? But I beg pardon; upon a late occaſion indeed Lord C——m ſhewed himſelf to be no friend to liberty; he was ſo very tyrannical, as well as Lord C——n, that he denied ſome traders the right, liberty and privilege, of ſtarving his fellow citizens, by exporting all the corn out of the kingdom, for which he has met with his reward, and been as much abuſed, as if he himſelf had been guilty of ſtarving them. Is there no Tarpeian rock for ſuch a tyrant?

Mr. Wilkes has now done with L—— C——, leaving him to the poor conſolation of a place, a peerage, and a penſion; for which, he ſays, he has ſold the confidence of a great nation. But I cannot take leave of, or have done with Mr. Wilkes, without making a few obſervations upon this paragraph: Mr. Wilkes is a great jeſter; in this place he cannot poſſibly be ſerious, for as to the penſion, I think I cannot explain it better to my countrymen, than in Mr. Wilkes's own words, Auguſt 12, 1762.

"I muſt, in compliance with a few vulgar writers, call the inadequate reward given to Mr. Pitt, for as great ſervices as ever were performed by a ſubject, a penſion, although the grant is not during pleaſure, and therefore cannot create any undue, unconſtitutional influence. In the ſame light we are to conſider the Duke of Cumberland's and Marlborough's, Prince Ferdinand's and Admiral Hawke's, Mr. Onſlow's, &c. &c. &c. I was going to call it the King's gold box; for Mr. Pitt having before received the moſt obliging marks of regard from the public, the teſtimony of his ſovereign only remained wanting."

Now as Mr. Wilkes has ſo fully ſet forth the nature of this penſion, I cannot think it will at all leſſen the confidence of the nation in Lord Chatham: It may very poſſibly leſſen their confidence in Mr. Wilkes, who has contradicted himſelf ſo furiouſly, and perhaps deſtroy that idea of conſiſtency which the gentleman boaſts of in his letter to the Duke of G——; where he aſſures his Grace that, "however unfaſhionable ſuch a declaration may be, conſiſtency ſhall never depart from his character." The reader has the proofs before him, and will judge of it accordingly.

LONDON, JULY 18.

THEY write from Vienna, that the Emperor has lately found out an excellent method for employing a great number of lazy people: The order of religious, called Fathers of Mercy, ſwarming in his dominions, he has ordered every convent to detatch ſome of their fraternity to attend the infirmaries, and aſſiſt the ſick throughout his Empire.

We hear that one of our Eaſt-India ſhips lately arrived, fell in with a pirate ſhip in the Chineſe ſea, the commander of which was an Engliſhman; he was manned with blacks, and was cruizing againſt the Dutch.

Extract of a letter from Liſbon, July 4.

"The expedition, conſiſting of four men of war and ſeveral tranſports, hath been fitted out with greater diſpatch than was ever uſual in this place, and is ſailed. Theſe ſhips are to take in two regiments that are quartered in the province of Algarve, and are to be embarked from the ports of Saint Uval and Tavira. General Bohm, a German officer in this ſervice, is commander in chief. The certain deſtination of this armament, however ſtill remains a profound ſecret; for though ſome people had thought it was to join the Spaniards againſt the ſettlements of the Jeſuits in Paraguay; others to quell an inſurrection in the iſland of Terceira; and others again to put their iſlands in a poſture of defence from an apprehenſion of the court of England, on account of differences; it is now thought to be for a matter of far greater conſequence. Many of the people of Rio de Janeiro complaining of the ill treatment of their Governor, and the deſtructive ſchemes with which their trade has been oppreſſed of late years, had quitted that ſettlement, it is ſaid, and had retired into the woods, where others had joined them.

"When meaſures, contrary to the inclination and intereſt of the people, are carried on, it is not ſurprizing their diſcontents ſhould be frequently breaking out; neither can it be expected, that thoſe meaſures will be obſerved any longer, than while the reigning government has power to inforce obedience."

JULY 20. It is ſaid that orders are gone over to America, to recal a conſiderable body of troops lately embarked from Ireland.

JULY 21. A noble foreigner lately arrived here, whoſe anceſtors were all natives of Ireland, hath lately ſent orders to that kingdom to have a ſtrict ſearch made to find out his poor relations, in order to provide for them, he being immenſe rich, and without iſſue.

Letters from Smyrna, of the 11th of laſt month, mention, that "there are great commotions between the Greeks and the Catholicks, cauſed by the Greek biſhop, who under pretence that ſeveral of the natives have married young women of his religion, who had afterwards turned proſelytes, had applied to the civil magiſtrate, giving him to underſtand that all marriages contracted out of his church were invalid." Theſe letters alſo add, that "the biſhop having ſpirited up againſt the Franks all the inhabitants of his dioceſe, the latter had undertaken to tear from the arms of the huſbands their wives, as guilty of leading a bad courſe of life."

The King of Poland has nominated the Count Podoſki, referendary of the crown, to the dignity of primate of that kingdom.

JULY 22. A letter from Podore factory and ſettlement ſays, that one of the Mooriſh caravans had lately diſcovered a long way in-land, a ſpecies of white negroes of a very diminutive ſtature, one of whom, of the male ſex, they brought with them to the fort, who did not exceed three feet high.

It is computed that the immenſe ſums of money already paid, and finally to be paid and carried out of the kingdom, for wheat, flour, &c. imported, will equal, if not exceed, the ſum of 450,000*l. ſaid to be remitted from foreign parts for corn exported in the years* 1765 and 1766.

Mr. Almon in Piccadilly, has purchaſed Mr. Wilkes's hiſtory of England, which is ſaid to be a continuation of Rapin, from the Revolution to the preſent time.

JULY 23. Yeſterday the court of directors of the Eaſt-India company gave an elegant entertainment to Lord Clive at the King's arms tavern in Cornhill.

This week ſome freſh inſtructions have been diſpatched to the Admirals Pye and Parry, commanders in chief of his Majeſty's ſquadrons in the Weſt-Indies.

We hear that yeſterday the papers and journals of the officers and ſeamen on board the ſtore ſhip arrived in the Downs from Port Egmont, one of the new diſcovered iſlands, where brought up to the admiralty-office, for the inſpection of the Lords Commiſſioners.

Count de Guerchy has been great part of four years at the court of Great-Britain, and it has been obſerved, that the three laſt years, ſoon after his departure to France to ſettle his family affairs, there has always been a change in the Britiſh miniſtry, and probably it will not be long before there is a fourth.

'Tis now ſaid that his grace the Duke of Grafton and Lord Gower are to be Secretaries of State; and (agreeable to what we mentioned before) that the Marquis of Rockingham is to be at the head of the treaſury.

It is ſaid that Lord Clive will ſhortly be created an Engliſh Baron.

It is ſaid that five ſhips of war are ordered to be ſtationed on the coaſt of Guinea.

Lord Camden, 'tis ſaid, will be appointed preſident of the council; and the hon. Mr. York, Lord high-chancellor.

JULY 24. A certain political ſcheemer, we hear, is forming a plan for an annual and durable miniſtry, part of which is upon the principle of Mr. Patterſon's plan for raiſing 1560000*l. which is, that, for the future, in the months of Auguſt or September, public notice ſhall be given to all thoſe, who intend to offer themſelves candidates for the miniſtry (and it is not doubted but they will be all capable) to give in a liſt of their names; after which, let them be* 500 or 1000, their names ſhall be put into a wheel, and the miniſterial places, whether they be 50, 100, or 156, put into another, with a proper number of blanks; that theſe ſhall be drawn, and whoever has the lucky chances, ſhall be entitled to ſuch places for a twelve month, and no longer. By this plan we may ſee one of the Secretary's of State at the board of green cloth, and a commiſſioner of the exciſe firſt Lord of the treaſury. One thing, we are told, he has entirely left out, the law places, for the good of the ſubject.

The Bruſſels Gazette of Thurſday laſt ſays, "The Engliſh merchants at Liſbon complain, that after having enjoyed an almoſt excluſive privilege of commerce in the dominions of his moſt Faithful Majeſty, they are now obliged to yield to other nations, who are able to deliver certain manufactures at ten per cent. below thoſe of England. And, on the other hand, M. de Mello, the Portugueſe miniſter at London, who is often in conference with the miniſtry there, complains of the proceedings of the Engliſh merchants, and juſtifies the miniſters of his ſovereign, who, according to him, do nothing but what is indiſpenſible for the good of the kingdom, and what every ſtate owes to itſelf and its people."

Yeſterday the lots for the iſland of St. John's were drawn before the Lords of Trade, in the plantation office, when numbers of people had their chance of lands in that iſland; and by the map, it contains one million five hundred thouſand acres of land.

It is aſſured, that a certain great officer has made upwards of ſeventy thouſand pounds within theſe few months, by the diſputes among the India company.

We hear that a certain linen-draper has invented a ſcheme to enrich the whole world; ſo that for ſome time to come, every body, if they pleaſe, may have plenty of money in their pockets.

JULY 25. It is ſaid that the favourite has found means to divide the oppoſition, and thereby diſappoint the expectations of the publick, who were in hopes of ſpeedily ſeeing a permanent eſtabliſhment take place in this too long unhappily divided nation.

But the favourite's dependents give out that Lord Temple inſiſted on terms improper to be accepted of, which has rendered the approbation of his plan impracticable; ſo that this miniſtry muſt continue in place for ſome time longer.

Whatever truth there is in theſe reports, it is, nevertheleſs, certain, that the favourite foreſeeing the ruin of his influence, in conſequence of an adminiſtration adviſed by Lord Temple, will uſe his utmoſt efforts to prevent the introduction of a miniſtry under the direction of ſuch auſpicious councils.

One Eaſt-India Captain, we are told, cleared by his laſt voyage 30 000 l.

No leſs than 250,000 l. worth of diamonds were brought home in one of the laſt veſſels from the Eaſt Indies.

Letters from Liſbon, dated June 16, ſay, "The object of the ſea expedition for which preparations have been long making, is not yet known to the publick. The three men of war, and five tranſports belonging to the Pernambucco company are now ready to go to ſea, and only wait the arrival of ſome troops they are to take on board. One of the King's ſloops lately ſailed for Rio Janeiro, and ſhe was convoyed by a man of war to a certain latitude; from which it is preſumed that ſhe has ſome important diſpatches on board for the Governor, relative to the expedition in queſtion."

Wedneſday Lord Rockingham had a ſhort conference with his Majeſty at St. James's; and it was ſoon after reported, that all negotiation with his Lordſhip was at an end.

We hear a great perſonage has expreſſed his reſentment, in pretty ſevere terms, to a certain nobleman, of the inconſiſtency of his conduct hitherto, which, it is ſaid, would be attended with a ſpeedy reſignation.

It is currantly reported, that the ſame methods will be purſued in aſcertaining the ages, numbers, and occupations of the popiſh inhabitants in Scotland, as are now ſet on foot in this kingdom.

We hear that orders are given for thoroughly inſpecting and repairing all the capital ſhips of war in the docks of this kingdom, to report the ſtate and condition of them to the lords of the admiralty.

We hear that an ingenuous mechanic at the weſt-end of the town has found out a method of extinguiſhing fires without water or the uſe of any kind of liquid.

We hear that a plan has been laid before the government, which has for its object the ſending to Eaſt-Florida felons of either ſex, convicted for tranſportation; white ſervants being much wanted in that ſettlement.

JULY 27. According to the laſt letters from Tetuan, the French ambaſſador paid 300,000 dollars for the ranſom of the French ſlaves at that place, and delivered a preſent of 20 000 l. value to the Emperor of Morocco, with whom he has concluded a peace for 20 years.

The Spaniſh ambaſſador, at the ſame court, made alſo a valuable preſent, paid down 100,000 l. and delivered up 320 Mooriſh ſlaves, who were priſoners in Spain, on concluding a peace with the Emperor.

The Venetian ambaſſador paid down 50,000 chequins, and a large preſent, value 10,000 l. on concluding a peace with the Emperor.

So far has a total ſtop been put to the late intended changes, that, we are informed, diſpoſitions are making phœnix like, to rear a new adminiſtration on the ruins of the old one; which, from the ſolidity of the materials, will at leaſt have the merit of being founded on a rock.

JULY 28. John, late Earl of Hyndford, was, in 1741, upon the King of Pruſſia's invaſion of Sileſia, ſent envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the court of Berlin, and the year after accommodated the differences which occaſioned that war. Upon the concluſion of the treaty of Breſlaw, he had the order of St. Andrew conferred upon him; and as a teſtimony of the ſatisfaction of the contending powers, he received a royal grant from the King of Pruſſia, dated at Berlin, 30*th September* 1742, for adding the Eagle of Sileſia to his paternal coat of arms, with this motto, Ex bene meriio, which is likewiſe ratified by a diploma from her Hungarian and Bohemian Majeſty, dated at Vienna, 29*th November* 1742. In 1744, he went ambaſſador to the court of Ruſſia, where he continued till the year 1750, and by his negociation with the court of Ruſſia, he contributed in a great meaſure to accelerate the peace, which was concluded at Aix-la-Chapelle. After his return to England, he was appointed a privy counſellor, and one of the Lords of his Majeſty's bed-chamber; and was again ſent upon a commiſſion of great importance to the court of Vienna, Anno 1752. He was elected one of the 16 Scotch peers to the 9*th,* 10*th, and* 11*th Britiſh parliaments, &c. He is ſucceeded in his eſtate and honours by John Carmichael, of Caſtlecraig, Eſq; ſecond ſon to the hon. Mr. William Carmichael, of Skirling, advocate, ſon to the firſt Earl of Hyndford.*

From the Marquis of Rockingham's ſetting out for his ſeat in Yorkſhire, and ſeveral others of the nobility for their reſpective ſeats, it is generally ſuppoſed no changes will take place duing the ſummer months.

The Hague Gazette of the 21*ſt ſays, that one of the principal affairs that Sir James Gray, ambaſſador from this court to the court of Spain, is charged with, is to ſettle the diſpute relating to the Manilla ranſom.*

A letter from the confines of Poland ſays, "The election of Prince Charles de Radzivil, as marſhal of the general confederacy of the kingdom, has met with more obſtacles than were at firſt expected. He had for competitor the Count Potocki, one of the great officers of the crown; and the point concerning the Diſſidents was alſo a matter of diſpute; but all the difficulties were removed on reading a letter which had been received during the debates, from the Prince de Repain, the ambaſſador of Ruſſia. Prince Radzivil was ſoon elected marſhal; and it was agreed to add to the words holy religion that of predominant in the act of confederacy. When the marſhal's baton was delivered to the Prince de Radzivil, he made a ſpeech which drew tears from his auditors, whilſt he ſhed them himſelf in abundance. Immediately after the election, all the marſhals of the private confederacies took the oaths preſcribed, in the preſence of a great number of counſellors and miniſters of the crown; and when they had ſigned the act, they elected eight counſellors for each province. The Counts de Tarlo, Potocki, and Oſſolinſky, were alſo nominated to repair in quality of deputies from the confederacy, the firſt to the King, the ſecond to the Empreſs of Ruſſia, and the third to the King of Pruſſia. The Count Branicki, great-general of the crown, arrived yeſterday at Wengrow, and there took the oats, which were adminiſtered by the perſons authorized by the confederacy for that purpoſe. The confederacy will be removed ſoon to Lublin, and from thence, as it's ſaid, to Leopol, in order to unite with that of Lithuania."

JULY 29. They write from Rochfort, that four thouſand tons of naval ſtores, ſhip timber, &c. have been lately depoſited in magazines in the haven of Palmaney, a few leagues from Breſt, where ſome third rate men of war are now upon the ſtocks.

By a letter from Cadiz there is advice, that the Spaniards were ſtrongly fortifying the city and harbour of Carthagena, by the addition of ſeveral new works.

They write from Gibraltar, that two large tranſports, laden with naval ſtores, from the Baltick, were juſt arrived there, on their way to Fornali, on the Gulph of St. Fiorenzo, for the uſe of the Corſican fleet.

JULY 31. Yeſterday the count la Lippe, who lately arrived in town from Germany, was introduced to his Majeſty at St. James's, and was graciouſly received.

Yeſterday M. de Vignoles, reſident from the republic of Venice, had a long conference with the Earl of Shelburne. M. Mello de Caſtro alſo had a long conference with his lordſhip, in Hill-ſtreet, Berkley-ſquare, on the ſubject of ſome diſpatches from Liſbon.

Wedneſday the Lords Commiſſioners of the board of trade adjourned for ſix weeks,

Some letters from Genoa adviſe, that all the nobles, who compoſe the great council, have had circular letters ſent them to repair to town, in order to deliberate on ſpeedy meaſures to be taken with the court of France, relative to the iſland of Corſica.

They write from Liſbon, that a courier had juſt arrived there with ſome diſpatches of importance from Madrid, on which account, orders had been given for the immediate ſailing of the Portugueſe ſquadron, but the place of deſtination continued to be variouſly talked of.

This morning his Excellency, Count de Viri, the Sardinian ambaſſador, had a conference with the right hon. the Earl of Shelburne, at his Lordſhip's houſe, in Hill-ſtreet, Berkley-ſquare.

NEWPORT, (Rhode-Iſland) Auguſt 31.

The following is a particular and authentic account of the melancholy accident which happened on board the Brig Dolphin, commanded by Capt. John Malbone, of this town, viz. Laſt Wedneſday night ſhe arrived off Point Judith, from Jamaica, and when within about five miles from the land, at half after ten o'clock the ſame night, a negro boy went down between decks, amongſt the rum, where there ſtood ſeveral puncheons of water, and (as he ſays) with an intention to draw ſome water, but miſtook and broached a caſk of rum; at the ſame time the door of the lanthorn, in which he carried the candle being open, and the candle falling into the rum, ſet it on fire: This ſo affrightened the boy, that he neglected to ſtop the running of the rum, and in leſs than half a minute the head of the caſk flew out, and the flames were immediately communicated to fifteen caſks more, all between decks, ſo that all poſſible means uſed to extinguiſh it proved entirely ineffectual;—the veſſel was all in flames in a very few minutes, and conſequently reduced 26 perſons, being the number of people including paſſengers, on board, to a diſtreſs and horror that muſt be left to the reader's imagination;—among many of them ſubſiſted the tender and endearing connections of huſband and wife, parent and child, brother and ſiſter, &c. between whom the mercileſs flames were now effecting a cruel and an inevetible ſeperation; and it was with the utmoſt difficulty that a ſoul on board ſaved his life.——There was eleven paſſengers, viz. Mr. John Henry, Mr. William Brooks Simpſon, Mr. Nathaniel Green, Mrs. Storer, Mrs. Henry, Miſs Anne Storer, Miſs Frances Storer, Miſs Maria Storer, Miſs Sarah Storer, and Mr. Henry's two children, one 16 and the other 4 months old; five of whom periſhed in the following manner, viz. Mrs. Storer, Miſs Sarah Storer, and Mr. Henry's two children, being in the cabbin were ſuffocated with the ſmoke before the two ſmall boats could be got out, they being thrown over with the utmoſt difficulty, not having any thing ready to hoiſt them: Mrs. Henry was upon deck, with her ſiſters, and might have been ſaved with them, but overcome with maternal love and affection, on hearing her mother cry out, The Children,—Oh the Children, ſhe ran and threw herſelf down the Companion, into the flames, and was there instantly consumed.—The remainder of the people to the number of twenty one, got ashore with difficulty, in the two small boats, not without being wet in landing; some of them the same night, with trouble and fatigue, got up to the house of Mr. Silas Niles, who received them with great humanity, and afforded them all the assistance in his power, as did also the rest of the neighbours. —the vessel burnt 'till eight o'clock next day, when she sunk.

The above Brig belonged to Messrs. Evan and Francis Malbone, of this town, was upwards of 200 tons burthen, was allowed to be the best vessel belonging to this colony, and was returning from her first voyage, with a rich and valuable cargo, and had got within three or four hours sail of this harbour when this misfortune happened. The vessel and cargo were valued at four thousand pounds sterling, and the effects of the passengers at two thousand pounds sterling.

Mr. CROUCH,

Please to insert the following Lines, and you will oblige more than one of your constant Readers.

PHILARETES.

A Poem occasioned by the Death of the Rev. Mr. WILTON.

O Muse, to whom Elegiack Lays belong,
Tho' ne'er before invok'd, assist my Song;
Teach me in melancholy Strains to mourn,
O'er pious WILTON's much lamented Urn.
Relentless Death! of Guilt the awful Bane,
Why should such Innocence thy Shock sustain?
Dost thou pursue the Gen'rous and the Just,
Shall pure Religion mingle with the Dust?
Shall conjugal Regard thus disappear,
And leave a volitary Consort here?
Is Charity, the Queen of Virtues, fled,
And Bounty buried with the silent Dead?
Has Virtue then no blest Reward in Store,
No bright Elysium when this Life is o'er?
Is WILTON forc'd with Brutus to complain
That all her Wages is a Life of Pain?
Here cease, my mournful Muse, Complaints so sad;
For he had Virtues Brutus never had:
Borne on the Wings of Faith his Soul has flown,
Thro' airy Regions to his Maker's Throne;
Absorb'd in Vision in' his blest Abode,
He holds Communion with his Author, GOD.
Perhaps with Lightening's speed he glides away
Thro' brightest Æther in celestial Day:
Or borne on Cherub's Wing he boldly soars,
And all that Newton faintly saw, explores:
Perhaps in Harmony he strikes the String,
Or with the adoring Seraph joins to sing:
Perhaps he guards his much lov'd Consort's Bed,
Dispels all Harm, and hovers o'er her Head;
Expecting when her panting Soul shall fly,
And join with his in Fields of purer Sky.

Mr. Crouch is desired to give these few Lines a Place in his Paper—dedicated thro' pure Gratitude and Respect to the Memory of the late Mr. JOSEPH-DACRE WILTON, deceased. By one of his attentive HEARERS.

Reader pause here and drop a Tear,
No more the Musick of his Tongue you'll hear.

LET CAROLINA mourn, but CHARLES-TOWN weep!
The pious WILTON's early fallen a-sleep.
Heaven's glorious Chaplain he is gone to be,
Who cordially explained God's Word to thee:
Then dry the Tear, with our dear Friend rejoice;
He has changed earthly Toys, for heavenly Joys!
Whoso' do'st with thy End like his may be,
See those attempt his spotless Purity.
Even here his Conversation was in Heaven,
But now he tastes true Joys; there freely given!
Adieu sweet Pastor, thy bright FAME is such;
We never can rejoice or mourn too much.
